

Human trafficking a Social Problem Key Notes:

Human trafficking is a global issue that involves the exploitation of people, particularly women, and children, for various purposes, including forced labor, sexual exploitation, and organ trafficking. In the Nepali syllabus, the topic of human trafficking is covered in the Social Studies chapter of Class 10. Here are some key notes on the three types of trafficking mentioned in the question:

Girl Trafficking:

- Girl trafficking refers to the forced or coerced movement of girls within or across borders for various purposes, such as sexual exploitation, domestic servitude, or forced marriage.
- Girls are often lured or deceived by traffickers who promise them better jobs or marriage opportunities.
- Poverty, lack of education, and social norms that discriminate against girls contribute to the problem of girl trafficking.
- Girls who are trafficked are often subjected to physical and sexual abuse, forced to work long hours without pay, and denied access to basic needs such as healthcare and education.

Child Trafficking:

- Child trafficking refers to the recruitment, transportation, transfer, or exploitation of children for various purposes, including forced labor, sexual exploitation, and organ trafficking.
- Children who are trafficked are often vulnerable due to poverty, lack of education, and social exclusion.
- Traffickers use various tactics to deceive or coerce children, including promises of education or job opportunities, and threats of violence or harm to their families.
- Children who are trafficked may suffer from physical and emotional abuse and are often denied access to education and healthcare.

Organ Trafficking:

- Organ trafficking refers to the illegal trade of organs, tissues, or body parts for transplantation or research purposes.
- Organ trafficking is a global problem, with the demand for organs far outweighing the supply.
- Traffickers often prey on vulnerable individuals, such as those who are poor or have limited access to healthcare.
